Fiber Optics in Harsh Environments of Offshore Technology

These photos were submitted by Greyson Knapp, FOT-OSP

This is before the rebuild.

Greyson Knapp and a colleague perform acceptance testing of subsea cable. Where are the hardhats?

Even test connectors must be potted to protect them from pressure differential and water ingress.

There's no room in the connector back shell for slack. No mistakes allowed!

Here's a close up of steel-wrapped fiber cable used in offshore technology.

One of Knapp's colleagues tests ocean bottom geophysical equipment with fiber optic telemetry.

When terminating the fiber optics within a complex cable, a breakage of an optical fiber can cause the complete retermination of all the elements within the cable. This can cause a delay of several days.

This is after the rebuild.
